BEFORE YOU GO: GET ON THE LIST

1. In orientation they fill out an Inmate Proposed Visiting List and give it to their unit counselor. They also say which visitors need accommodations for a disability.
2. Each visitor who is not confirmed immediate family may get a background check and must be approved. The complex gives out the FCC Visitor Information Form (in English or Spanish) with the visiting rules. They mail them to you.
3. The list holds at most 10 people. Approved friends may be limited to three, depending on how many family members are on it.
4. They must have known you before prison, unless the Warden approves an exception. A visitor with a criminal conviction is reviewed by the Unit Manager, and the Warden decides.
5. They tell you whether you were approved. Do not drive until you are approved. They can add or delete people at any time, and the unit team checks the list every 30 days.[1]

AT THE DOOR

SCREENING	Everyone clears the walk-through metal detector. If you fail it, you cannot come in (people with a medical device and a doctor's letter get another kind of screening). Your hand is stamped with invisible ink and checked as you come in and leave. Visitors get random pat searches (same sex staff) and random ion scanner tests. Refuse the ion scan and you cannot visit for at least 48 hours.[1]

No powders, creams, bowls or cups, and no baby carriers or strollers.[1]

WHAT THEY WEAR	Inmates in the prisons wear issued khaki shirts and trousers, a T-shirt, underwear and socks, and are visually searched before and after. Camp inmates wear green shirts and trousers.[1]
WHEN IT GETS CROWDED	Staff first ask for volunteers to leave. Then local visitors and those who drove the fewest miles are asked to leave. Last, the people who arrived first.[1]
